

Case File 1001

Thornton Fever Hospital

1st Visit

Present on the investigation were ...

Alex - Team Leader / Live Cam Operator

Martyn - Live Cam Lighting

Maryann - Team Sensitive

Elaine - Guide For Location

Mark - Photographer

Julie - Investigator

Zoey - Investigator

Jac - Investigator

Craig - Camera

Michelle - Investigator / EVP

Kim - Camera

The night started slow, with not much happening until after the witching hour.

Not that I personally think that had anything specifically to do with anything as we have conducted many an investigation previous to this on Halloween and the timing hasn't been an issue before.

We were led into one of the rooms of the hospital where Maryann was picking up on several different timelines which Was confusing her.

Just as we had paused to get a sense of what happened in the room, we all felt a large dunt from the floor.

It felt like the floor was about to cave in beneath us, so we quickly moved to another building.

There were several pieces of graffiti on the walls which was a little unsettling, reading things like, "four in, one out" and various other warning messages.

We moved to a building where Michelle attempted to call out and communicate with spirit and to her surprise she got more than she bargained for.

The K2 EMF meter registered readings on request and Michelle was soon able to obtain some EVP recordings whilst trying to engage with the spirit.

The response that came across the most clearest sounded like "ya wee bastard" in a guttural Scott's dialect.

Kim noted that there was a considerable amount of battery drain on the camcorder she was using.

Martyn and I also noticed that the live cam had also dropped its feed and would not connect or even record.

Zoey also reported a fault with a K2 EMF meter as it was stuck with all the lights lit on it no matter where she went.

Once we left the building, all hardware returned to normal although these shall be thoroughly tested.

The last thing that jumps out to my recollection was when I was conducting interviews with the team to document their thoughts of the investigation.

We then heard what sounded like a child's laugh followed by a horn noise, similar to a clown's horn. At first we thought it was maybe a goose or something but it was a little early for that we thought.

I checked the area where the noise originated from but there was no sign of a goose, or a clown thankfully. We affectionately referred to it as Pennywise after that.

"They all float down here" ...

We later discovered that it was local wildlife that we had recorded. It was amusing to see Martyn's reaction at the time though.

Genuine state of fear. 😊

Unfortunately that's all that we managed to get from the investigation.