Present on the investigation:

Alex: Lead Investigator/Tech

Alec: Sensitive

Maryann: Sensitive

Dez: Camera

We were initially contacted by the owner as she had been experiencing some strange poltergeist activity, with a mirror moving from a wall, to unexplainable noises throughout the house.

The owner's daughter had also started to sleep walk, which was out of character, and so she wanted us to investigate the property to see if it was haunted.

Living Room:

Maryann's initially felt a connection with the grounds of the house and that the activity may be tied to what was there before the house was built.

Alec got the impression of the name Lucy Jackson, and heard the phrase 'Lucy is tired'.

The owner stated that her mother had all of a sudden become very sick. She had been drinking alcohol which could have naturally been the cause of this.

Maryann mentioned that she was getting an impression of the names Weir and Parker. Dez also mentioned at this point that Lorraine's reflection in the mirror looked to be much older. He looked again but everything appeared to be normal. It was a strange personal event to experience, so it was noted for the report.

Since walking into the house Alex's sinuses were suddenly blocked. Lorraine had been with Alex since 4pm working on previous EVP's and can confirm that he had been absolutely fine all afternoon.

We eventually put that experience down to hay fever, as the pollen count was quite high that day and the grass had been freshly cut.

Maryann got the impression of the name Gillespie in this room before we moved on as she was not getting much else at the time.

Upstairs Landing:

Dez stated that when he was at the bottom of the stairs earlier he saw a pair of legs walk from the left side to the side at the top of the stairs.

Maryann stated that she was feeling quite dizzy at the top of the stairs. So we moved on from here to ensure she did not fall.

Sons Room:

Alec mentioned that he did not like the feeling in the sons bedroom. Both Maryann and Alec began to experience a dizzy sensation again, so we decided to move from the room to see if the sensation would lift. It did briefly but returned later. As we were exiting the room, Alex stated that he could see a mist at the entrance of the room. We could not naturally explain this at the time.

Daughters Room:

As soon as Lorraine crossed the threshold of the room she felt extremely dizzy. Dez reacted and stated that he felt the sensation of something touching the top of his head. There was nothing hanging from the ceiling and no spider webs were evident so this remained unexplained at this point.

Alec felt the impression of the word constable, but was unsure if that was a name or referring to a police officer.

Due to the amount of people suffering from dizzy spells and experiencing physical sensations of feeling touched, visual sensations of mist and various names without making sense with us, Alex conducted an air quality test which registered as severely polluted.

The VOC count (Volatile Organic Compound) was recorded as dangerously high, which would have definitely accounted for the sensations the family and our team were experiencing.

In chemistry, an organic compound is generally any chemical compound that contains carbon. Due to carbon's ability to bond with other atoms, millions of organic compounds are known. In this particular case it was the fumes from the recently spray painted rooms which was triggering such a high reading and would certainly contribute towards the frequent dizzy spells and potentially have a hallucination type effect.

We naturally alerted the owner of our findings and advised her to open all her windows to fully ventilate the house.

Whilst continuing with the air quality test in the corner of the room where Maryann and Alec sensed a presence the equipment we were using to monitor the air quality completely drained of battery power. The equipment is always fully charged prior to embarking on any investigation, so it seemed odd as the battery life on this device would easily last until the next day normally.

We attempted some EVP experiments but nothing much came of it after analysis.

Maryann felt that the name of the spirit in question was Mac. She felt that he was not happy with the name of surrounding land, of which we will not identify in the report to maintain the owner's privacy.

Dez pointed out to Alex that there appeared to be something floating around the room on the camera. The footage revealed this to be an insect.

At this point the team left the Voice recorder on the bedside cabinet and the camera rolling in the room whilst we went for a break.

On returning to the room after our break, nothing unusual was recorded.

Maryann got the impression of the year 1865 and believed that the male spirit presence had worked at a brick works and was hit accidentally by a bogey (cart on tracks). Alec stated that an exploding Kiln (oven) kept coming to his mind.

Living Room:

Dez placed the camera on the carpet and when he picked it up the casing was very hot. This was not typical behaviour for the camera.

Kitchen:

Whilst Alex and Alec were talking to the owner and her mother in the kitchen the mother's handbag was sitting on the worktop. Alec witnessed the bag twist a bit and then fall off the counter onto the floor. On examining the situation, the bag did appear to be quite heavy and was sat at the edge of the counter, so we deduced that this was more than likely a natural event, albeit a very spooky one at the time.

Although our sensitives did sense a spiritual presence, we believed it to be benign as we were able to explain most of the events naturally.

Maryann had asked the spirits that were present if they were happy to exist in peace with the current owner to which they seemed obliging, so there did not appear to be any cause for alarm and we could help put the owner's mind at ease.
